Rik Webstar,” aka “Webstar,” and DONALD ROSS BECHEN, aka “drbechen,” aka “Donkey,” and others, known and unknown to the Grand Jury, conspired, combined, and agreed with each other, and with others, known and unknown to the Grand Jury, to knowingly and intentionally distribute methamphetamine via the Internet, as set forth below:

I. INTRODUCTION
THE CONSPIRACY TO DISTRIBUTE METHAMPHETAMINE VIA THE INTERNET

The World Wide Web—Internet.

1. The Internet is a collection of computers and computer networks that are connected to one another via high-speed data links and telephone lines for the purpose of communicating and sharing data and information. Connections between Internet computers exist across state and international borders; therefore, information sent between two computers connected to the Internet frequently cross state and international borders even where the two computers are located in the same state.
2. Email, also known as "electronic mail," is a popular means of transmitting messages and/or files in an electronic environment between computer users. When an individual computer or user sends email, it is initiated at the user's computer, transmitted to the subscriber's email server, and then transmitted to its final destination. A server is a computer that is attached to a dedicated network and serves many users.
3. An email server may allow users to post and read messages and to communicate via electronic means. Many individuals and businesses obtain access to the Internet through businesses known as Internet Service Providers ("ISPs").
4. ISPs provide their customers with access to the Internet using telephone or other telecommunications lines; provide Internet email accounts that allow users to communicate with other Internet users by sending and receiving electronic messages. All the messages through the ISP's servers, remotely store electronic files on their customers' behalf, could provide other services unique to each particular ISP. ISPs maintain records pertaining to the subscriber accounts maintained by them. Those records often include identifying and billing information, account access information in the form of log files, email transaction information, posting information, account application information, and other information both in computer data and written record format.

5. An Internet Protocol address, or "IP" address, is a unique numeric address assigned to computers using the Internet. An IP address looks like a series of numbers, each in the range of 0-255, separated by periods (e.g., 121.56.97.178). Every computer using the Internet must be assigned an IP address so that Internet traffic sent from and directed to that computer may be properly directed from its source to its destination. Most ISPs control a range of IP addresses to be assigned to their customers' computers.

Pretty Good Privacy—PGP—Encryption.

6. PGP is a data encryption and decryption computer program that provides cryptographic privacy and authentication for data communication. PGP is often used for signing, encrypting, and decrypting texts, emails, files, directories, and whole disk partitions and to increase the security of email communications. PGP can be used to send messages confidentially, with the use of public and private symmetric keys, known as session keys, public keys and private keys. Only the private key belonging to the receiver can decrypt the session key. This encryption program was used by the members of this conspiracy to communicate in a confidential manner.

The Onion Router—TOR Anonymizer.

7. In September 2002, “The Onion Routing Project” (TOR) was released as a free software program to improve Internet anonymity. TOR directs Internet traffic through a free, worldwide, volunteer network consisting of more than four thousand relays to conceal a user’s location or usage from anyone conducting network surveillance or traffic analysis. TOR is intended to protect the personal privacy of users, as well as their freedom and ability to conduct confidential business by keeping their Internet activities from being monitored. TOR allows websites and electronic mail communications to completely mask IP addresses, thus allowing users to conduct their business without being monitored. Members of this conspiracy used TOR to ensure online anonymity and conduct illegal criminal activity.

The Internet Marketplace “Silk Road”.

8. In February, 2011, an Internet retail marketplace known as “Silk Road” offered for sale a variety of illegal items, using alternative payment methods, including the virtual currency known as “Bitcoins” (BTC) as payment for illegal items. BTC is a virtual currency that is not regulated and has no central authority or repository.
9. “Silk Road” was an online black market operated as a TOR hidden service such that online users could browse it anonymously and securely without potential traffic monitoring. Silk Road was an “underground website.” The majority of electronic communications between the methamphetamine distributors in this conspiracy and customers was on the Silk Road website via internal private messaging, via the Internet and email, using confidential messaging encryption programs as described above.

10. The Silk Road site contained a seller's guide and buyer's guide containing extensive guidance on how to conduct transactions on the site without being caught by law enforcement. The seller's guide, for instance, instructed vendors to "vacuum seal" packages containing narcotics in order to avoid detection by canine or electronic sniffers. The buyer's guidance instructed buyers to use a different address from their own address to receive shipment of any item ordered through the site, such as a friend's house or post office box from which the user could then transport the item discreetly to its final location.
11. The Silk Road forum likewise contained extensive guidance on how to evade law enforcement, hosted by users on the site themselves. For example, in a section of the forum labeled "security," TOR, BTC, cryptography, anonymity, security were posted and discussed by users offering advice and other means to other users on how they should configure their computer so as to avoid leaving any trace on their systems of the activity conducted by them on Silk Road. The Silk Road site contained a protocol for reporting on how long the seller had been a vendor, how long it had been since the vendor had last been seen on the site, what the ranking of the seller was, as well as whether there was positive feedback, and if so, from how many fans and after a listing of numbers of transactions.
